

Protecting Your Digital Identity

Protecting What Matters:
Awareness Series by Turicum

2 minute read

Introduction

Your digital identity is the gateway to your financial world. It includes not only your passwords and devices, but also your habits, how and where you log in, what you share, and the tools you trust.

Attackers increasingly target these small weaknesses rather than bank systems themselves.

Everyday exposure

Real losses often start with something small.

A client postpones a device update for weeks.

A text message arrives claiming to be a parcel notification.

A link is clicked without thinking.

In several European cases, just one click installed a covert screen mirroring tool. The attacker waited silently until the next online banking login and observed everything required to compromise the account.

These incidents highlight a reality that most modern fraud is caused by small habits, not complicated hacking.

Good digital habits that make a big difference

Strengthen passwords - use long passphrases or a password manager. Don't reuse credentials across personal and professional accounts.

Enable multi-factor authentication (MFA) - prefer authentication apps or hardware keys. SMS codes are better than nothing but remain vulnerable.

Keep devices updated - security patches fix known vulnerabilities that attackers actively search for.

Avoid public Wi-Fi for financial activity - compromised hotspots can capture credentials or modify web traffic.

Limit oversharing on social media - personal events, travel plans, and job details help attackers tailor convincing scams.

Two-Factor Authentication enabled

Turicum's approach

Turicum protects client information using:

Encrypted communication channels to reduce interception and misuse.

Multi-layered authentication to prevent access even if credentials are exposed.

Continuous monitoring to detect unusual activity early and stop it quickly.

Regular cyber-awareness training so staff recognise deception and verify before acting.

Simple habits build strong defences.
Protect your access as carefully as we protect your assets.

This feature forms part of Turicum's Protecting What Matters: Awareness Series, a collection designed to help clients and intermediaries stay alert to fraud risks and protect their information online.
